Fertilome Potting Soil

My sister in law called us last spring and told us her hands would break out in a rash every time she worked with the most advertised potting soil in America. We just laughed and told her to get some Fertilome Potting Soil. She then said, “No I am serious do you know if anything is wrong with the most advertised potting soil in America?”

So I called another friend of mine in the garden center business and told him the story. He said, “Have you looked at the label on the back of the most advertised potting soil in America? You will find your answer if you do.”

So we went to the big box retailer and looked at the back of a bag of the most advertised potting soil in America. The label on the back had two warnings. One label warning said, ‘Keep out of reach of children’, which is a pretty standard warning. The other warning said, ‘Wear gloves when handling.’

My first thought was, you have got to be kidding me, wear gloves when handling potting soil? Makes me wonder what is in it?

Fertilome Potting Soils have no such warning on the label. Stick your fingers in our potting soil, maybe your toes if you like, but for sure put your plants in it, the plants will like it just as much as your hands!

ColorStar!!!

Colorstar is back for an encore performance this year. Last year this was a new product and it was well received. Get a jug this spring and try this new fertilizer on your plants.
